In this presentation I will talk about my recent book Writing Pregnancy in Low Fertility Japan (UHP 2017). This year as ever, the decline in the total fertility rate in Japan has been a topic of concern in Japanese newspapers as the number of babies born cause demographers and economists concerns about Japan's future. In my book, I look at how some Japanese women have thought about the process of becoming pregnant and giving birth. I argue that the way of talking about pregnancy and childbirth has not changed markedly from the early twentieth century despite all the historical and economic changes. However, I note that with the increasing popularity of manga and new manga writers this narrative begins to change.
